A new look for Proceedings

I'm sure you've noticed Baylor University Medical Center Proceedings' new design this issue. We wanted a more modern and readable look, and we hope you like it. The fonts, colors, and logo are in line with Baylor's new graphic standards, which establish a consistent visual message for all of the health care system's materials.

Another small change: we will start using the official PubMed abbreviation for the journal in footers and references: Proc (Bayl Univ Med Cent). If you cite Proceedings' articles in your material, you may want to use this abbreviation as well, since doing so will enable users to find the articles more easily. While the full text of articles (from 2000 on) is available on PubMed Central (http://www.pubmedcentral.nih.gov/tocrender.fcgi?action=archive&journal=302), articles continue to be available on the journal's website as well (www.BaylorHealth.edu/Proceedings).

We welcome your feedback about both the substance and style of Proceedings. You can reach me at cynthiao@BaylorHealth.edu.
